Summary: DO NOT READ UNTIL YOU READ RENEE #2 (part 2) -- last David poem

Goodbye, Traitor

For the dead traitor who tried to eradicate the light

For the limpened corpse that died while trying to fight the evil fight

For the cold, bitter teenager that once so innocent seemed to be

For him -- for you, David, I set your parents free

We had a bargain; I fulfilled my side of a deal now annulled and gone

And though you broke your word, my word still is strong

And maybe, just maybe, their freedom you can see

For I've fulfilled the bargain, David, and your parents are now free

I kept my word, traitor, killer, don't you see?

Oh corpse, admit that I was right and hatred is a cheat

For you succumbed to it and I did not and it's my heart that still shall beat

And yours that lies within a grave lacking love and warmth and heat

~*~

Perhaps I am a murderer now and I have not met my goal
But it was your life or ours and so I tainted my soul
Forgive me for committing a deed that I repulsed so much
But my mind within me feels that it tried hard enough

I tried, oh traitor, this fact you must believe
I tried to let you live despite what you had done to me
Tried to hold onto my innocence and even stay naive
But there's a place to end the struggle between us, don't you see?

And with this one goodbye that truly is the last I leave your grave and your freed parents and attempt to forget the past
And forget the murder now on my hands and heart
And yet I do remember, for this crime was on my part

End
file.
